There is a portrait on the wall in the room.
Vasya turns to her father:
- Daddy, tell me about him.
- And do you know who this is?
- I know. This is Lenin.
- Yes, it's Vladimir Ilych Lenin. Our beloved, our dear leader.

So listen. I was young once. Life was not easy for us workers. The work was hard. You worked from morning until late at night and were starving.

Many of us worked in the factory. The owner of the plant was the capitalist Danilov. He did not work, he did not bend his neck, but he lived in wealth! Where did he get all this? We worked for him. He paid us little for our work - it is sure to say - he robbed us.

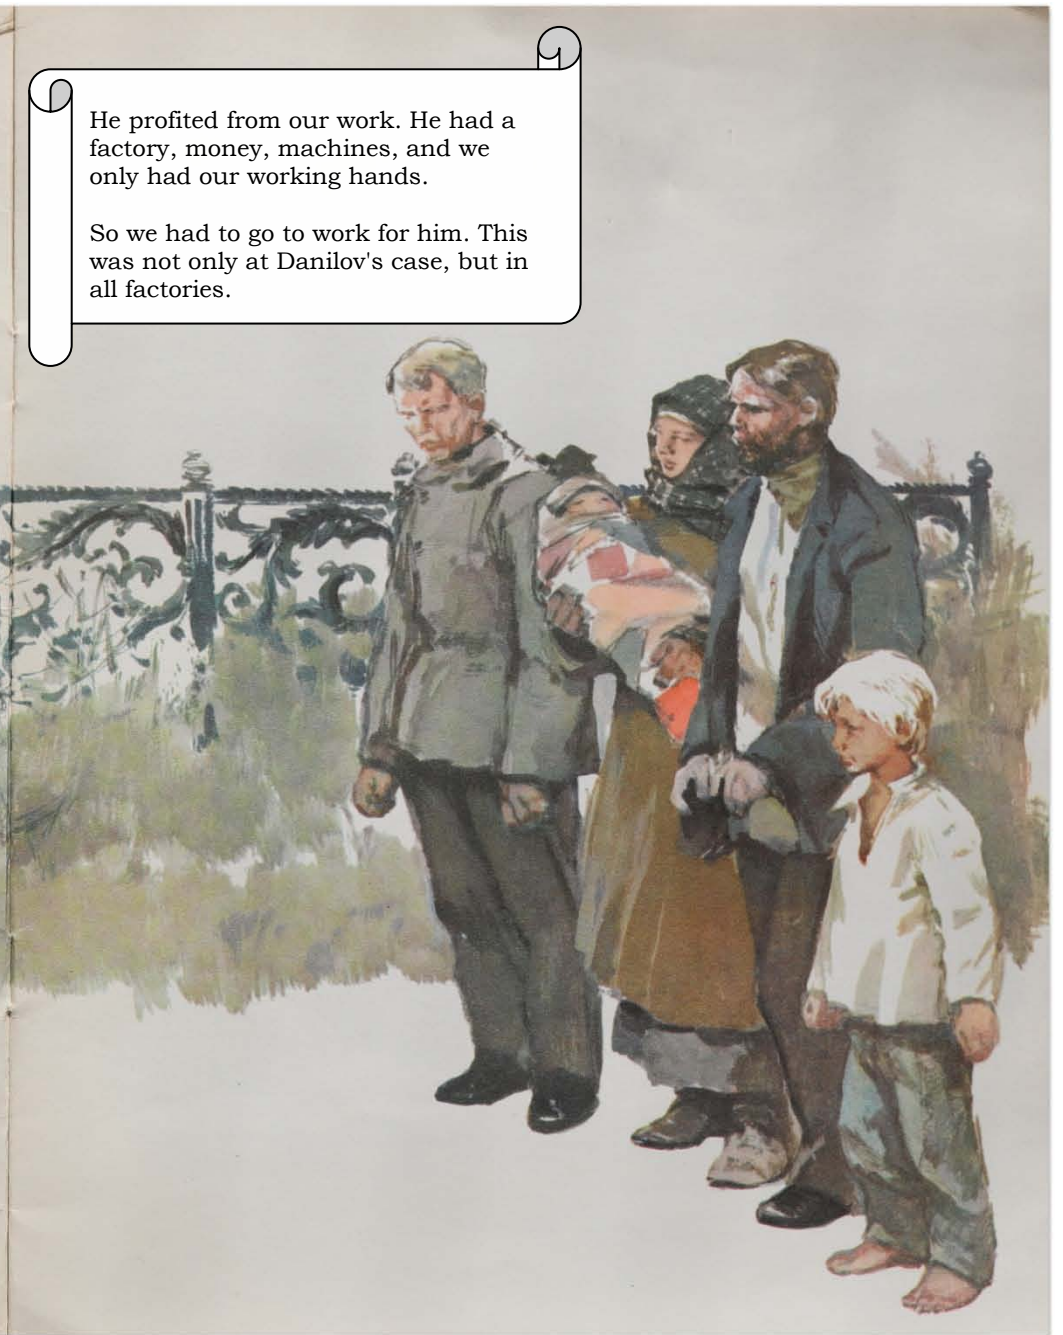

He profited from our work. He had a factory, money, machines, and we only had our working hands.

So we had to go to work for him. This was not only at Danilov's case, but in all factories.

Peasants in the countryside also lived poor. They had little land and the landowners had plenty. Peasants worked for landowners. The landowners lived in prosperity, and the peasants lived in poverty.

Landlords and capitalists were together. They were also supported by the most important and richest landowner - the tsar. He was the master of all. He introduced orders that were good only for the landowners and capitalists. And workers and peasants had a very difficult life in these conditions.

Vladimir Ilych Lenin was a friend, a comrade of the workers. He wanted to change the whole order. He wanted everyone who worked to live in prosperity. Lenin fought for the cause of the workers.

Lenin began to unite those who sided with the workers. There were more and more of them, and the workers' party - the communist party - was becoming more and more powerful.

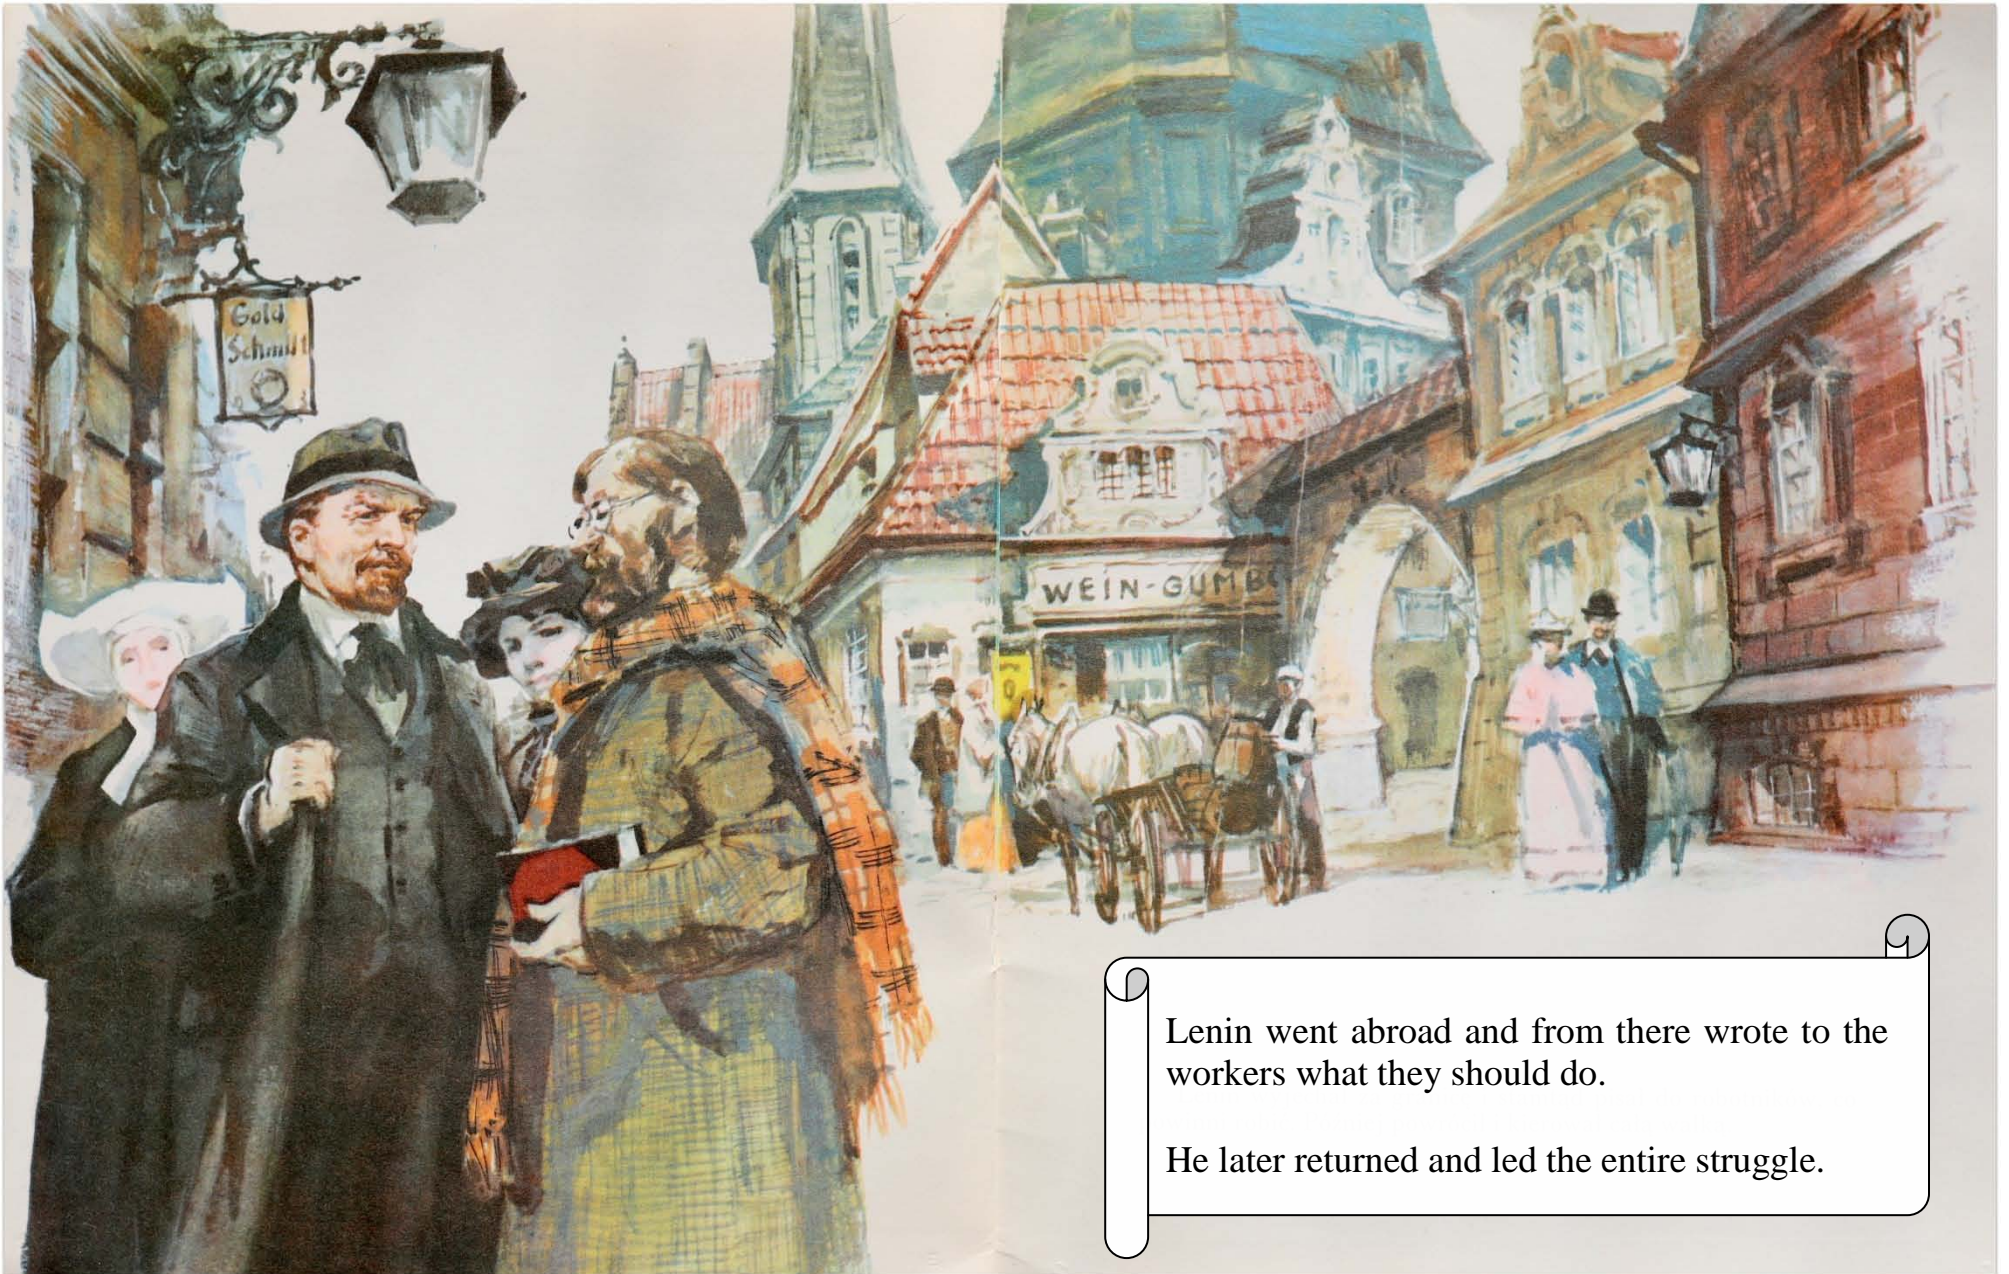

The party saw that it would achieve nothing without a fight. Workers of all countries also began to understand this.

The workers loved Lenin, and the landowners and capitalists hated him. The tsarist police arrested him more than once, threw him in prison, sent him to distant Siberia, and wanted him to remain in prison forever.

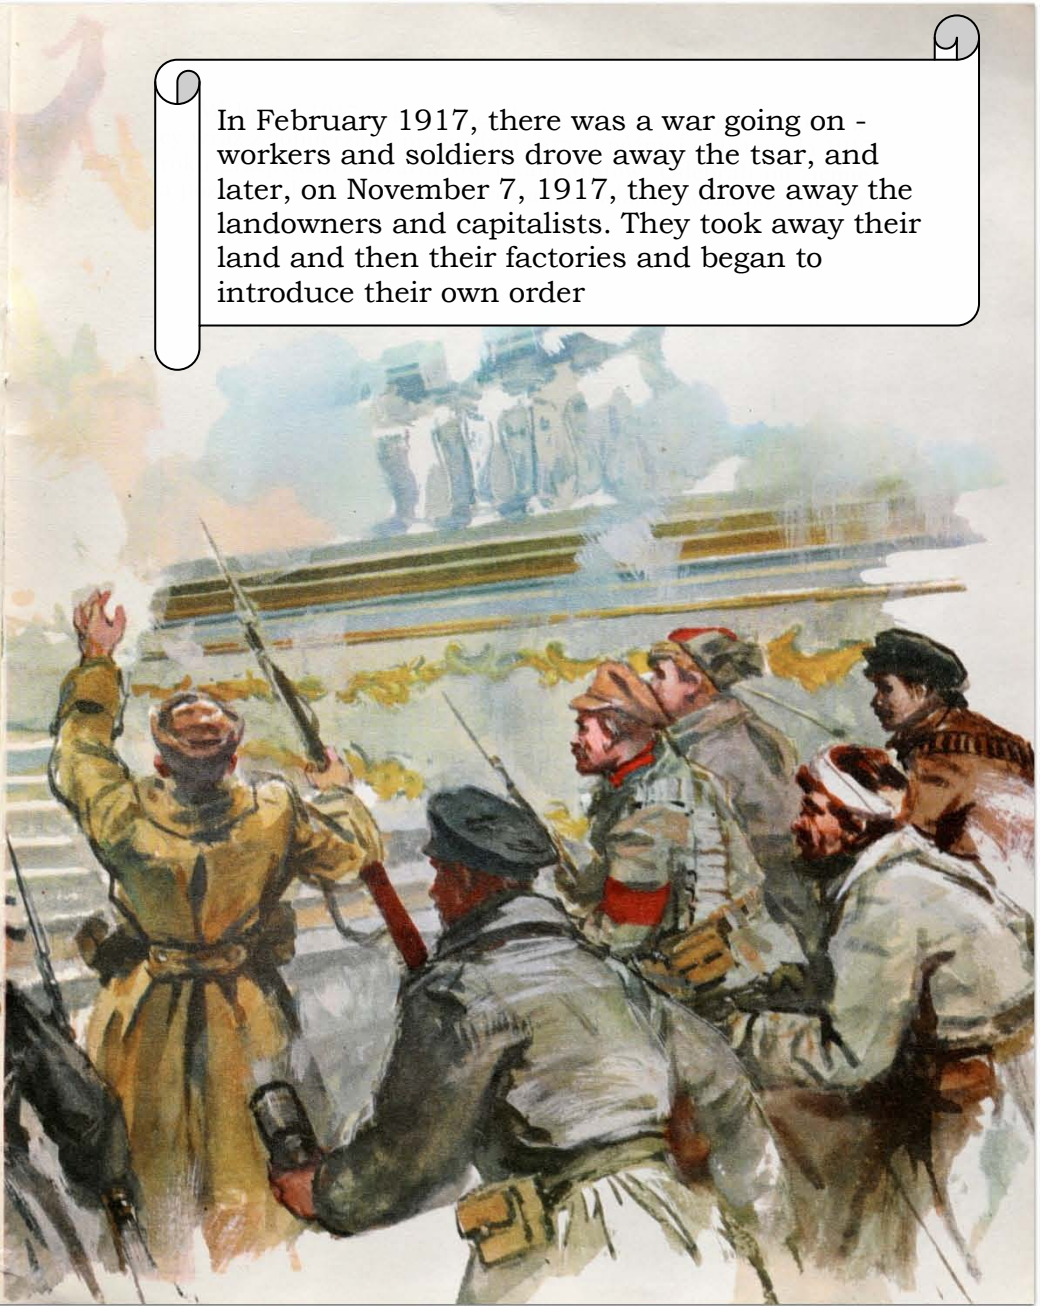

Lenin went abroad and from there wrote to the workers what they should do.

He later returned and led the entire struggle.

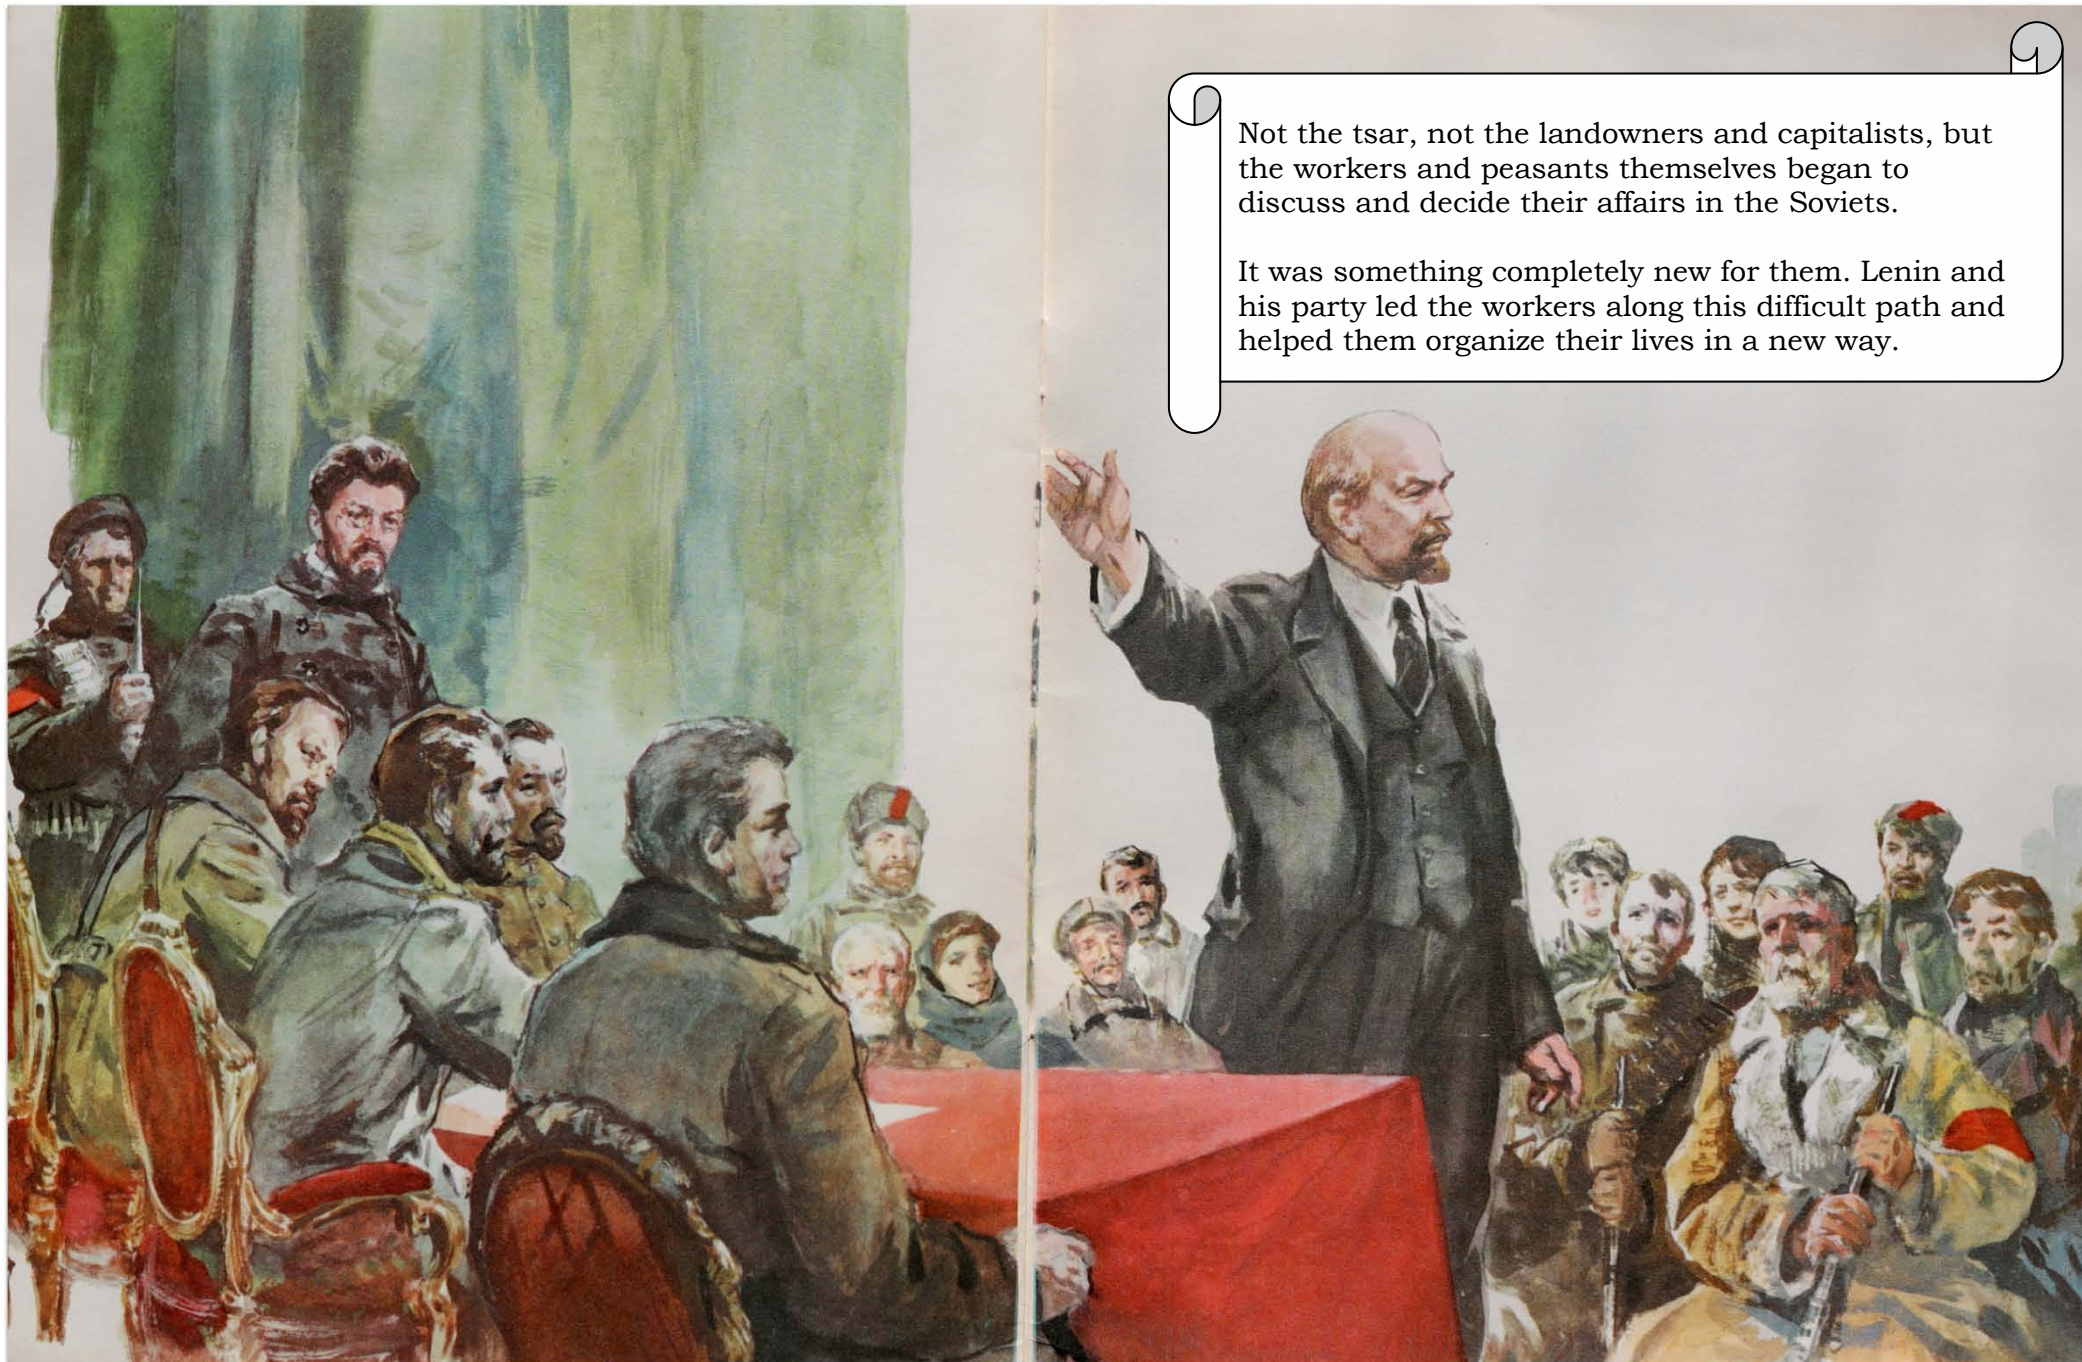

In February 1917, there was a war going on - workers and soldiers drove away the tsar, and later, on November 7, 1917, they drove away the landowners and capitalists. They took away their land and then their factories and began to introduce their own order

Not the tsar, not the landowners and capitalists, but the workers and peasants themselves began to discuss and decide their affairs in the Soviets.

It was something completely new for them. Lenin and his party led the workers along this difficult path and helped them organize their lives in a new way.

Lenin had to work a lot. He also had a lot of worries. Lenin was falling ill. In 1924, Vladimir Ilych Lenin died.

We were very sad when Lenin died.

We will never forget what Lenin said.
We try to do everything as he advised.
We organize work and life in new ways
